High vacancy rates decline with University development

By Vince Driver
Reporter

High vacancy rates in Bowling Green are making business tricky for rental agencies, as well as making finding a place to stay easier for renters.

The current vacancy rates are some of the highest the town has seen, according to Mayor John Quinn. He placed the rates at over 20 percent last fall, but said he thinks numbers will improve this fall.

"We think that things will be better in the fall, that the dormitories are going to be full, and that is going to give us a late boost," Quinn said.

Quinn said the vacancy problems in the city may have started with the number of large housing complexes that moved into the area, when students began moving off campus in greater numbers.

"We went from almost no student apartments except rooming houses to the ones that we have now. And eight or so years ago we had places like The Enclave come in, and that created a glut in the market," Quinn said.

"We think that things will be better in the fall."

John Quinn | BG Mayor

Local rental agencies and complexes have been affected by the vacancies in different ways.

Fite Rental Management owner Linda Fite has been able to keep her properties occupied, though she admitted it has taken more time than normal to find renters.

"Everything gets filled up eventually. I try to keep my prices modest," Fite said.

The Enclave 2, an apartment complex located at Napoleon and Klotz roads, has also been affected.

"It has made the competition a lot tougher, and renters have been doing more to lease their apartments," Donte Harris, director of community operations for The Enclave 2, said.

Harris said he worried the increased vacancies were a result of enrollment issues at BGSU, combined with upperclassmen staying in on-campus housing. He was not completely negative, however.

Despite some struggles, Harris said large housing complexes like The Enclave 2 have some advantages when competing with rental agencies.

"It's easier for us because we have one central location, and we can take them right into a place and show them around," Harris said.

University housing has suffered in recent years, as well, though the recent changes in residence life have changed that drastically.

Jennifer Kilian, senior coordinator of housing administrations at the University, said all current construction projects have reduced vacancies on campus. She characterized the upcoming academic year as a transition year for on-campus housing, which has made the assignment process slower than usual.

"It's an interesting time right now. We've taken down Rodgers, so we're over-full, and we're going to be using every space on campus," Kilian said.

AFTERMATH: The flag hangs at half mast outside Lake High School on Tuesday afternoon. Exterior and interior building damage will cause students to continue courses at a different location in the upcoming school year.

Tornado devastates towns

By Max Filby
Reporter

Bill Brossia was one of the lucky ones.

Although his farm in Lake Township was littered with debris, including a crushed car and part of a garage door, his barn was still standing. Brossia has been picking up debris off the field of his farm since June 6.

"It's a 100 acre farm and I'd say about 20 percent of it is covered with debris," Brossia said. "It's going to take another week or two, at least, to finish, especially if it rains."

First responders and volunteers are still working to clean up what is left of Lake Township and Millbury after tornadoes devastated the community. Heavy rainfall has prevented volunteers from walking through the muddy fields to pick up debris left over from the storms.

On a scale of zero to five, the tornado was a three, making it the strongest Ohio tornado in eight years. A series of tornadoes caused damage throughout the Midwest over the weekend.

The tornado also caused five deaths total, all occurring in Ohio, according to the Associated Press.

While Brossia's barn was left standing, the four surrounding houses were completely destroyed. Down the street from Brossia's farm, Lake High School was also destroyed by the tornado.

The field house, main office, classrooms, the credit union, busses and the football field were all virtually destroyed.

"We were able to get all of the student records out, so we were really lucky in those regards," said Jay Ackerman, Lake High School assistant principal.

High winds also blew in windows at the middle and elementary schools, but unlike the high school, the buildings will likely open for school in the fall. High school administrators will be looking for a temporary location until reconstruction can be completed.

RIISING STAR: Recent University graduate Taurence Armstrong at his Village Green apartment. While a student, Armstrong began a talk show, "BG On TV," on WBGU.

University alum competes for Oprah sponsored talk show

By Bobby Waddle
Reporter

After creating a successful talk-show formula for last year's inaugural "BG On TV" broadcast, University graduate and broadcast journalism major Taurence Armstrong plans to take it to the international level.

Armstrong submitted his audition video for "The Taurence Armstrong Show" to Oprah.com as part of her "Your Own Show" contest, where five finalists are granted an opportunity to win a time-slot on Oprah's future television network.

During his time at the University, Armstrong worked as a radio host for WBGU, worked at the BG News and formed his own company, Pillar, to produce a magazine and radio show, according to LinkedIn.com.

While Armstrong said he enjoys running a company, he stressed the need to learn how to do it correctly.

"What I need to do is learn my craft inside and out," Armstrong said. "You can't ever be a leader if you're not willing to be led by someone."

With three successful television internships, including stints with PBS, CBS and ABC News, Armstrong gained valuable insight to the entertainment industry while reinforcing his beliefs about hard work. He said that everyone around him was working continuously to keep the show going.

"It's not being willing to work hard to get to some glorified level and then just stop," Armstrong said. "You have to keep it going and you have to really believe in what you're doing."

Working as an intern at ABC News in New York led to an encounter with Diane Sawyer, who offered the interns some simple advice: "You can change the world, so just do it."

"It was really refreshing to have someone at that level to say what I knew to be true for so long," Armstrong said.

Armstrong's goal to host a television show is in keeping with his passion for helping people. In his audition tape, he said that his show will place emphasis on the viewer's thoughts and concerns, calling it "your chance to give and get wisdom."

"I want my actions to match my desires, I want someone to care about me," Armstrong said. "I'm so in tune with that, and that allows me to really be a host that is the utmost empathetic, because I understand."

Armstrong said that the show will cover topics ranging from pop culture, current events and feature musical performances to expand upon the format he created for BG On TV.

"We are here to help you juice up your life," Armstrong said. "There is no reason why that can't be fun."

Armstrong's enthusiasm has impressed faculty, as well.

"He's just such a likable guy," journalism professor Jim Foust said. "I think it is very possible [that his show gets picked]. It is certainly the direction of his passion."

Journalism professor Victoria Ekstrand said that Armstrong has a natural ability to connect with his audience, noting his "commanding presence."

"There is a very sure look in his eyes when you talk to him," Ekstrand said. "He has tremendous energy, enthusiasm [and] willingness to be with and help people."

Armstrong acknowledged that making connections with people is essential for success, crediting his production team of telecommunications majors for getting him through the challenge of creating his audition tape.

"The reason why people on TV are so good at what they do is that they have a team of people around them who support and believe in them," Armstrong said.

Ultimately, he said it is because he enjoys the work that he can make it through long nights in the editing lab, and that his work "never gets redundant."

"It's my coffee, it's my caffeine," Armstrong said. "I think the sky has no limit for this type of work."

While he would love to receive his own talk show, Armstrong said he is considering becoming a news reporter if he does not win the Oprah contest.

"It would certainly be great if this happened, but I'm still going to be myself if I don't get this," Armstrong said. "I still really believe that there is something out there for me that is going to be transformative."

Right now, Armstrong wants people to vote. Voting can be repeated infinitely until July 3.

Armstrong said he wants people to spread the word through Facebook by posting his video to their statuses. He previously had success raising money for his ABC internship through the website.

"Facebook really helped me back then, hopefully Facebook can help me right now."

place to call home, while trying to keep the students together," Ackerman said.

Although there is no time line set up for school reconstruction, workers have already managed to cap a gas leak and will soon be tackling Internet and power outages in the school district.

Lake High School was supposed to hold its commencement in the now destroyed field house of the high school on June 6. The ceremony was postponed until June 8 at Owens Community College.

"They've really stepped up as far as the ceremony goes," Ackerman said about Owens. "The disaster will be mentioned, but it won't be the entire ceremony; it's time to move forward."

In an attempt to aid Lake Township and Millbury, Andrew Zepeda announced "Andrew Z's Restaurant Relief" during his morning radio show on 92.5 Kiss FM. On June 10, area restaurants will be donating 15 percent of their total sales to the American Red Cross for tornado relief.

The idea began with one local bar in Oregon that plans to donate 15 percent of its total sales.

"It snowballed from there, and in one hour we had 24 businesses," Zepeda said. "It's cool because people are so willing and want to help in some way."

Zepeda's own restaurant, Andrew Z's Sports Pizzeria and Bar, will also be participating in the relief program.

Faculty voice: It's our choice.

What will collective bargaining bring?

A voice. Collective bargaining ensures faculty representation in decision-making.

Excellence. When faculty needs are met fairly, students benefit from a mission-centered education. Everyone wins.

Tradition. The American Association of University Professors has a ninety-five year history of advocating job security as a basic requirement of academic freedom.

Competitive Salaries. Faculty at unionized campuses negotiate better salaries and benefits, making it easier to recruit and retain top notch colleagues.

Collaboration. The BGSU Faculty Association is democratic, participatory, representative, and responsive. It provides a venue for faculty to come together for the common good.

Recourse. The BGSU Faculty Association is democratic, participatory, representative, and responsive. It provides a venue for faculty to come together for the common good.

Transparency. A negotiated contract will require the administration to operate with a new level of transparency and engagement. We can all be part of the solution.

Vote "yes"

for collective bargaining.

'Spaced' is a blast from British television past

TV
REVIEW ★★★★★

By Marisha Pietrowski
Pulse Reporter

Since the television is largely full of reruns and lackluster new programming right now, summer is the perfect opportunity to discover shows that went under the radar in their initial run.

For those who appreciate clever and silly comedies from over the pond, "Spaced" is a great summer discovery. Airing from 1999-2001, Simon Pegg and Nick Frost (both from "Shaun of the Dead" and "Hot Fuzz") star in this show about twentysomethings in London attempting to survive in the new millennium.

Pegg's character, Tim Bisley, shares a flat with aspiring writer Daisy Steiner (Jessica Stevenson) and an array of fellow building dwellers and friends (such as Frost's gun-loving Mike Watt) that create an interesting living environment. Tim and Daisy are fairly apathetic, and they must fight these tendencies in order to find happiness in their lives.

Filled with hilarious popular culture references and lovable, relatable characters, "Spaced," like the movies Pegg and Frost made together (with director Edgar Wright, who is also behind this show), provides an outright hilarious look at modern life. Anyone who enjoyed their movies is likely to enjoy "Spaced."

Since it's not the newest show, some of the pop culture references may be a bit outdated.

However, these references, such as Pegg's character's outrage

over "Star Wars: Episode I," are still relatable and ridiculously funny in 2010.

The short-but-sweet series only lasted 14 episodes, so even those with the busiest summer schedules can make time for the show. All of the episodes are available for free viewing on Hulu.com, and the entire series, complete with plenty of extra features, is available on DVD.

New rapper B.o.B. makes great pop record

ALBUM
REVIEW ★★★★★

By Zach Gase
Pulse Reporter

Bobby Ray Simmons is not to be pigeonholed.

One can't define his music in a single genre, he can do it all. He raps, sings, plays guitar, plays piano, plays trumpet and produces. He mixes elements of hip-hop, rock, reggae and various others into his 12-track introduction to the world.

His highly anticipated debut album, "B.o.B Presents: The Adventures of Bobby Ray" hit the shelves on April 27 after being pushed up from its original May 25 release date due to the success of his chart-topping lead single, "Nothing on You."

The album features guest appearances from rap's elite (Eminem, T.I. and Lupe Fiasco) as well as big name singers from the pop and rock worlds (Hayley Williams of Paramore and Weezer's Rivers Cuomo).

The album kicks off with the hard-hitting 808s and rolling keys of the self-produced "Don't Let Me Fall," followed by "Nothing on You" and the Lupe Fiasco assisted "Past My Shades."

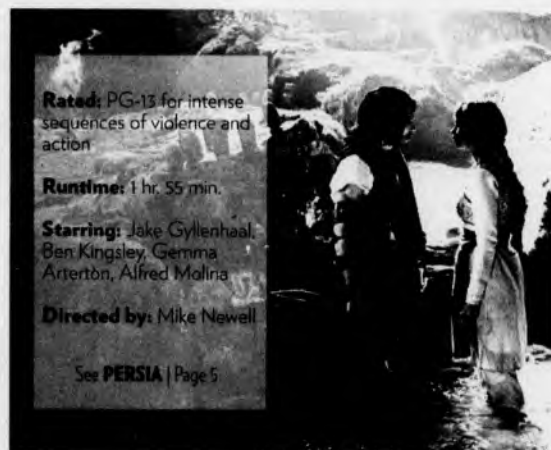

Ray's Adventures heavily features a pop-oriented sound, which can be a turn-off to pure hip-hop fans. The poppiness of tracks 7-9 ("Kids," "Magic" and "Fame") can be a little grating for hip hop listeners. "Kids" uses an awkward interpolation of Vampire Weekend's "the Kids Don't Stand a Chance," which doesn't do the original justice. "Magic" features an extremely radio-friendly hook provided Rivers Cuomo. And "Fame" features some of the best rapping on the disc, but is lost in the sing-song hook and unnecessary chant.

The sole traditional hip-hop song on the album, "Bet I," features guest verses from label-mates T.I. and Playboy Tre. It sounds a little out of place and would have been better suited for one of Ray's mixtapes.

While the album isn't short of catchy, feel-good songs perfect for the summer, B.o.B's subject matter throughout is pretty unoriginal and superficial. The record may be lacking in any lyrical dexterity and there aren't any stand-out bad songs to be found. It is a very fun, laid-back record that one would think a 21-year old would make. Bobby Ray simply crafted an excellent pop record.

Woohee
by Christina Aguilera feat.
Nicki Minaj

By Matt Liasse
Pulse Editor

Aguilera's first single off her new album "Bionic" was a little too GaGa. This time, Christina shines. The Aguilera name comes with a reputation to unite women together with sexuality and vocals that can shatter glass. A song with lyrics like, "you know you want to put your lips where my hips are," combined with the newest raved-about female rapper in the industry, leaves little room for failure.

Between The Lines
by Stone Temple Pilots

It's good to see Stone Temple Pilots finally back together (and sober). But when it comes to comeback tunes, this one is just so-so. The energy is exceptional on the track, but becomes too much toward the end, and the repetitive lyrics in the chorus are just mediocre. With that said, Scott Weiland's vocals and the guitar solo are the finest parts of the tune.

Neutron Star Collision (Love Is Forever)
by Muse

This song paints the picture of the love everyone yearns for. The mix of poetic lyrics, Matthew Bellamy's Freddie Mercury-sounding vocals, the uprising chorus and the soothing piano ending make this track a beautiful addition to the band's wide collection of perfect tunes.

Find Your Love
by Drake

At first glance, there's nothing even remotely close to Drake's typical flair in this song. Look at the production notes and you'll see why.

Producer of the track, Kanye West, offers what sounds like an outtake of his '808s and Heartbreak' album. The track shows versatility in Drake. He shows he has vocals, not just rhymes, and can pull off emotion on this club-banger.

My First Kiss
by 3OH3 Feat. Ke$ha

3OH3 is a little genius band, genius in not taking itself too seriously. They are the masters of making someone smile with their humorous songs' themes.

The beats in this song are perfect for a clap-along and the lyrics feature innocent, playful sexuality. Ke$ha's role in the song is pretty useless, though.

Revolver event pleases palate

REVIEW

By Amanda McGuire Rzicznek

After a celebrity chef charity event at Revolver Restaurant in Findlay this past Thursday, diners left extremely satisfied and thrilled to help a good cause.

To aid the Franciscan Earth Literacy Center, Top Chef contestant Valerie Bolon united with Chef Andrew Maykuth from The Admiral in Asheville, N.C.; Chef James Lohse from the Watermark in Nashville; and Pastry Chef Erin Mooney from BLT Steak in Atlanta.

Without the ingenuity and generosity of Revolver co-owner and Chef Michael Bulkowski, the event wouldn't have been possible.

"I feel honored to cook with friends and help Sister Rita's cause," Chef Bulkowski said.

With its seasonal ingredients from local farms, the menu, which was paired with wines from Ampelography, Raptor Ridge Winery and 55 Degrees, was outstanding.

The service began with a lively and light English pea amuse-bouché with serrano ham purée and lemon confit.

The dish beautifully awoke the palate and teased diners.

Chef Bulkowski's chicken consommé delicately balanced earthy flavors with a hint of lemon. The goat cheese raviolis and fava beans gave the dish texture while the chicken meatballs and chanterelle mushrooms added layers of flavor.

The subtle bacon flavor in Chef Maykuth's wild Alaskan halibut gave the dish a wonderful smokiness that highlighted playfulness between the vidalia onion, piccino, maitake mushrooms and English peas.

A dish that brought the dining room to silence before it burst into praise was Chef Lohse's pork belly with radish purée and smoked pak choi. Clean and simple, this dish was velvety and comforting.

Diner and BGSU General Studies Writing instructor Dan Rzicznek said, "The pork belly was magical."

Chef Bolon's much-anticipated dish furthered the momentum of the meal. The axis venison with apple-beet-potato gratin and asparagus-fennel salad brought together sweet and tart, light and rich; it successfully married several flavor combinations.

To round out this exceptional meal, pastry Chef Mooney lightened the palate with red wine-soaked strawberries. While the dish paid flawless homage to spring in Ohio, it's pairing with a rosé conflicted with the berries' tartness.

Chef Mooney's second dessert of soft chocolate with tres leches cake and mole crunch was a grand finale of flavor fireworks with its sweetness, salt and heat; a perfect finish to an extraordinary meal.

Yet again Debi and Michael Bulkowski hosted a successful culinary event that exceeded diners' expectations but, more importantly, helped the Franciscan Earth Literacy Center.

"Prince of Persia: The Sands of Time" could be criticized for having an almost all white cast despite portraying Persian characters, its exotic treatment of foreign women, its shallow examination of political themes or any number of academic failings.

But what it should be criticized for is being a terrible movie in every respect.

This film will be defended as a mindless popcorn muncher, something to be seen for fun but not to be taken very seriously. Unfortunately it fails at being fun or even mildly amusing, instead turning into a plodding bore despite being less than two hours and full of chase scenes. The plot essentially boils down to the hero finding a magic dagger, then losing it, then getting it back and so forth while supporting characters die, until no more characters can die.

That's when the magic dagger kicks in and fixes everything, erasing about an hour of run time in the film. It is unfortunate that it stopped there, because had the entire 116 minutes been returned, I would be able to spend that time doing something more worthwhile such as watching grass grow or eating paint chips.

Despite the efforts of a few supporting characters, most of the acting in this film ranges from wooden to uninspired. It's quite an accomplishment to make dialogue boring when every sentence contains some combination of the words armageddon, destiny and guardian, but somehow the cast worked really hard to make sure it happened.

Oscar nominated star Jake Gyllenhaal could not overcome the painful banter written for him, and Gemma Arterton did not fare better as his love interest. The only exception was Alfred Molina, performing well in his comic relief role, which for reasons unknown included attempts at political overtones that failed miserably.

Even the special effects, which are supposed to be the redeeming factor in movies like this, looked awkward and primitive. In comparison to other video game films, the CGI would be comparable to Lara Croft: Tomb Raider, which is almost nine years old. The time rewind sequences made Gyllenhaal's arms look like volcanic faults for some reason that is never explained.

This is the strongest argument against video game films yet, because it only exists to reference and cash in on its existing franchise. The plot is little more than an excuse to string together high flying chase scenes, swashbuckling and time rewind sequences. It never takes a chance at going beyond the formula of the game. At least Super Mario didn't just reproduce the game for the big screen, and that is what makes the Prince of Persia one of the worst video game films yet.

'Spaced' is a blast from British television past

TV REVIEW ★★★★★

By Marisha Pietrowski
Pulse Reporter

Since the television is largely full of reruns and lackluster new programming right now, summer is the perfect opportunity to discover shows that went under the radar in their initial run.

For those who appreciate clever and silly comedies from over the pond, "Spaced" is a great summer discovery. Airing from 1999-2001, Simon Pegg and Nick Frost (both from "Shaun of the Dead" and "Hot Fuzz") star in this show about twentysomethings in London attempting to survive in the new millennium.

Pegg's character, Tim Bisley, shares a flat with aspiring writer Daisy Steiner (Jessica Stevenson) and an array of fellow building dwellers and friends (such as Frost's gun-loving Mike Watt) that create an interesting living environment. Tim and Daisy are fairly apathetic, and they must fight these tendencies in order to find happiness in their lives.

Filled with hilarious popular culture references and lovable, relatable characters, "Spaced," like the movies Pegg and Frost made together (with director Edgar Wright, who is also behind this show), provides an outright hilarious look at modern life. Anyone who enjoyed their movies is likely to enjoy "Spaced."

Since it's not the newest show, some of the pop culture references may be a bit outdated.

However, these references, such as Pegg's character's outrage

over "Star Wars: Episode I," are still relatable and ridiculously funny in 2010.

The short-but-sweet series only lasted 14 episodes, so even those with the busiest summer schedules can make time for the show. All of the episodes are available for free viewing on Hulu.com, and the entire series, complete with plenty of extra features, is available on DVD.

B.o.B.

New rapper B.o.B. makes great pop record

ALBUM REVIEW

By Zach Gase
Pulse Reporter

Bobby Ray Simmons is not to be pigeonholed.

One can't define his music in a single genre, he can do it all. He raps, sings, plays guitar, plays piano, plays trumpet and produces. He mixes elements of hip-hop, rock, reggae and various others into his 12-track introduction to the world.

His highly anticipated debut album, "B.o.B Presents: The Adventures of Bobby Ray" hit the shelves on April 27 after being pushed up from its original May 25 release date due to the success of his chart-topping lead single, "Nothing on You."

The album features guest appearances from rap's elite (Eminem, T.I. and Lupe Fiasco) as well as big name singers from the pop and rock worlds (Hayley Williams of Paramore and Weezer's Rivers Cuomo).

The album kicks off with the hard-hitting 808s and rolling keys of the self-produced "Don't Let Me Fall," followed by "Nothing on You" and the Lupe Fiasco assisted "Past My Shades."

Ray's Adventures heavily features a pop-oriented sound, which can be a turn-off to pure hip-hop fans. The poppiness of tracks 7-9 ("Kids," "Magic" and "Fame") can be a little grating for hip hop listeners. "Kids" uses an awkward interpolation of Vampire Weekend's "the Kids Don't Stand a Chance," which doesn't do the original justice. "Magic" features an extremely radio-friendly hook provided Rivers Cuomo. And "Fame" features some of the best rapping on the disc, but is lost in the sing-song hook and unnecessary chant.

The sole traditional hip-hop song on the album, "Bet I," features guest verses from label-mates T.I. and Playboy Tre. It sounds a little out of place and would have been better suited for one of Ray's mixtapes.

While the album isn't short of catchy, feel-good songs perfect for the summer, B.o.B's subject matter throughout is pretty unoriginal and superficial. The record may be lacking in any lyrical dexterity and there aren't any stand-out bad songs to be found. It is a very fun, laid-back record that one would think a 21-year old would make. Bobby Ray simply crafted an excellent pop record.

1901—The New York Giants pound out a record 31 hits and beat the Cincinnati Reds 25-13.

1973—Secretariat becomes the first Triple Crown winner in 25 years with a win at the Belmont Stakes.

The List

After rookie phenom Stephen Strasburg's debut last night, we take a look at the top five most highly hyped MLB rookies this year.

1. Strasburg: Strasburg was drafted first overall in 2009 and signed a record $15 million contract.

2. Heyward: Many have compared Jason Heyward's stroke to the legendary greats of the game. At 20 years old, he is making a big splash.

3. Leake: Mike Leake made a meteoric rise to the Show this year and has posted a 5-0 record and a 2.22 ERA.

4. Posey: The highly hyped Buster Posey is starting at first base for the Giants and began his season with three hits and three RBIs.

5. Jackson: Austin Jackson is only 23, but just seems to find ways to get on base against tough pitching. He is hitting .325 for the Tigers.

BG baseball camp offers valuable experience for both youths and coaches

By Zach Gase
Reporter

The Falcon baseball team gives back to the community every year by hosting a summer baseball camp.

Many players and coaches will be helping with the camp that will take place on June 21 and 22. The camp will give children ages 7-18 an opportunity to play on the same fields as the Falcon baseball and softball teams and interact with coaches and players.

Spencer Schmitz said that the camp, which has been run by the baseball team for nearly 20 years, benefits the community by bringing a lot of local kids to play and learn from Falcon baseball players and coaches.

"We like to attract local kids around the area and keep them interested in BG baseball," Schmitz said.

Frank Berry, who is a pitcher and infielder for the Falcons, said that working with the kids in the camp is a lot of fun.

"I like enhancing their baseball skills and having a great time with the little rascals," Berry said.

The camp will be split into two different age groups: 7-12 and 13-18. Players in the 7-12 age group will be focusing on fundamentals including throwing, catching and fielding. Players in the 13-18 age group will focus on batting techniques.

The players are there to learn more about the game and enhance their baseball skills, but they are also there to have fun, Berry said.

The players will get to compete in home run derbies at the end of each day of the camp. At the end of the camp, players will be split into two teams and play an exhibition game.

The camp also gives Berry, who is a family studies major, and teammate Ryan Schlater, an education major, experience working with children. Schlater, a catcher, said the camp gives him a good opportunity to work with children and helps him develop skills he will need to work with children in the future.

"A lot of times when dealing with kids you have to have patience," Schlater said.

The children and Falcon players are not the only ones who benefit from the camp. The camp gives the team's coaches an opportunity to scout out young, local talent that may one day become Falcons, Schmitz said.

Several of the players on the team's current roster have attended past summer and winter baseball camps hosted by the Falcon baseball team.

The camp will start at 9 a.m. and last until noon on both days. All participants who register will receive a t-shirt. There is a $75 registration fee for all participants. To register for the camp, contact assistant coach Spencer Schmitz at 419-372-7641.

BG rugby club takes third at national tournament

The BG rugby club participated in the USA Rugby Sevens Collegiate Championship Invitational over the weekend and won its Challenger Final match against Arizona State 32-12 on Sunday.

The squad went 4-2 with victories over Penn State, Army, Indiana and Arizona State. Its losses came at the hands of Ohio State and tournament champion Utah. BG lost to Utah 12-10 on Saturday, which was televised nationally on NBC.

The tournament marks another big milestone for the BG club, which has become a Midwest powerhouse in recent years. BG was one of only 16 teams invited to the inaugural tournament in Columbus.

Coffey named to Academic All-MAC Team

Senior Carmen Coffey put together a terrific career on the softball diamond, and capped it off Thursday by being named to the Academic All-MAC Team.

Coffey transferred to BG two years ago and played in 42 games for the Falcons. She was near the top of many offensive categories for BG, and led the team with 18 stolen bases.

Coffey finished her senior year with a 3.68 grade point average.

Powers earns ESPN The Magazine award

Junior distance runner Barbara Powers was named to the ESPN The Magazine Academic All-District Team Thursday.

Powers runs distance for the cross country and track and field teams. She recorded several top times for the Falcons, including a sixth place finish at the Mid-American Conference Championship. Her time of 11:02.30 is the fifth best time in BG history in the 3000-meter steeplechase event.

Powers is one of only five honorees with a perfect 4.0 grade point average.

BG Alumna Joyce deserves your support

SEAN SHAPIRO
SPORTS COLUMNIST

No doubt we were robbed of history.

With two outs in the bottom of the ninth, Detroit Tigers pitcher Armando Galaragga only needed to retire one more Cleveland Indian to complete the 21st perfect game in Major League history and an unprecedented third perfect game this year.

The grounder to first was cleanly fielded and replays show Galaragga beat the runner to the bag. This should have led to a celebration that Tigers fans haven't witnessed since Magglio Ordonez's home run sent them to the World Series, but it didn't.

First base umpire Jim Joyce, a 1977 BG graduate, emphatically signaled safe, leading to an outcry from all those in attendance and the social networking world where almost everyone who cares (and a lot of those who don't) about baseball had something to say via Facebook or Twitter.

On a night when Galaragga was perfect, Joyce wasn't.

But, you can't fault the man for being human.

We've all made mistakes and we've all made regrettable decisions. Unfortunately for Joyce, his mistake was made on the largest stage.

After the game, Joyce was visibly shaken and he apologized for the botched call, and it would have even been understandable if he had asked to get the next day off.

But he didn't and the next day we witnessed healing when Galaragga presented the lineup card to Joyce and the two embraced while tears streamed down the umpire's face.

We'll never know whether or not Galaragga truly forgave Joyce, but either way, the umpire deserves our support.

You should support Joyce since one mistake shouldn't define the career of an umpire who has done a consistent job ever since he entered the Major Leagues.

Or you should support Joyce since he shares a common bond with many of you as a resident of Northwest Ohio, or as a Bowling Green Falcon.

Or you simply should feel sympathy for a man who doesn't deserve to have the rest of his life defined by a split second decision that very few people ever have to make at that speed.

So he missed one. Who hasn't?

You can feel angry, sad, upset or whatever other feeling you have right now, but at the end of the day, it was just a baseball game.

Yes we were robbed of history, but one bad call shouldn't rob Jim Joyce of his future.

Reds draft big bat in first round Grandal second catcher selected in four years

By Joe Kay
The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — The Reds went for a catcher for the second time in four years, taking Miami's Yasmani Grandal with the 12th overall pick in the first-year player draft on Monday night.

The junior was the Atlantic Coast Conference's player of the year, batting over .412 with 14 homers while leading the Hurricanes to their 38th straight NCAA tournament appearance. He's a switch-hitter who has gotten better at the plate during

Izzo will pay up if he leaves MSU for Cavs coaching job

By Larry Lage
The Associated Press

Tom Izzo will owe Michigan State $500,000 if he leaves to coach the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Cutting a check shouldn't be a problem.

A person familiar with the situation told The Associated Press on Tuesday that Cavs owner Dan Gilbert and Izzo discussed terms of a possible contract that would pay the coach up to $6 million a year for four or five seasons. Use of one of Gilbert's jets has not been discussed.

The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the discussions were to be confidential.

The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer first reported Monday that Gilbert and Izzo talked about the framework of a deal, worth about $6 million a season for up to five years.

Izzo makes more than $3 million a season and is under contract through 2016. Kentucky gave John Calipari an eight-year contract topping $31 million last year, the largest known deal for a college basketball coach.

According to the latest version of Izzo's deal — which was last signed by him on Sept. 4, 2009 — he has to pay the school $500,000 within 30 days of terminating his employment if he takes a job

"I've taken the no-comment-on-all-of-it policy, which is a little bit unlike Tom Izzo."

Tom Izzo | MSU head coach

in pro or college basketball.

Since the Atlanta Hawks offered Izzo a lucrative offer to leave Michigan State after he won the 2000 national championship, his name has been mentioned regularly for openings in the NBA and NCAA.

He has turned deals down in the past, or has chosen not to pursue possible opportunities, but the Cavs might give him an offer too good to refuse.

Especially, if Izzo knows — or has a good indication — that LeBron James will resign in Cleveland.

A message was left Tuesday by the AP for Izzo, who didn't confirm or deny the Cavs-related reports in a radio interview Monday night.

"I've taken the no-comment-on-all-of-it policy, which is a little bit unlike Tom Izzo," he said on WILS radio in Lansing, Mich. "But I've been very consistent with that. And maybe to close it up, I would just say there are so many things out there that are so far-fetched right now.

"I'm the Michigan State coach and that's what I'm going to do right now. Who knows what the future brings? But it sure isn't at all like it's maybe being speculated."

Gilbert reiterated in an e-mail Monday to the AP the team's policy is to not comment on "any rumor about potential new hires, trades, free agent signing, etc." Complicating his coaching search is the uncertainty surrounding James, the jewel of the marketplace when free agency opens July 1. James said in an interview last week Cleveland has "an edge" in re-signing him.

Izzo led the Spartans to the Final Four this year for the sixth time in 12 seasons. The late John Wooden at UCLA and Duke's Mike Krzyzewski are the only other coaches who have accomplished that feat.

If the Cavs want Izzo, they could offer him a chance to make twice as much as he does in East Lansing, where he has roots dating to 1983 when he was hired as an assistant coach. Izzo is from Iron Mountain, Mich., and has been Michigan State's coach since the 1995-96 season. He was promoted following Jud Heathcote's retirement.

catchers available in the draft.

"He's very polished," said Chris Buckley, the Reds' senior director of amateur scouting.

The Reds took catcher Devin Mesoraco, a Pennsylvania prep star, with the 15th overall pick in June 2007. Mesoraco spent his first three years of professional baseball at the rookie and Class A levels, struggling to hit consistently. He was moved up to Double-A this year.

When Grandal was still available at the 12th spot, the Reds didn't hesitate to get another catcher.

"There's so few everyday catchers across the minor leagues, that we just didn't think we could pass on him."

Chris Buckley | Scouting Director

"It's such a hard position to find," Buckley said. "There's so few everyday catchers across the minor leagues, or even in the major leagues, that we just didn't think we could pass on him."

The Reds have had good success with their top picks lately. Four of the last six are in the majors — right-hander Homer Bailey (2004), right fielder Jay Bruce (2005), center fielder Drew Stubbs (2006) and right-hander Mike Leake (2009).

It's the second time in three years that the Reds took a player from Miami in the first round.

They got first baseman Yonder Alonso with the seventh overall pick in 2008.
